having faith in auspicious things
having faith in fortune
when was the last time you thought about that?
will you make sure you get some breakfast in him?

Sussed

Sussed it is

I was playing with auspicious

Suspicious

Sussed

Yes

Playing with

Aussed

Assuaged

Horse

Ooh

Hahahahaha

I know the word, what does it mean?

Test of reliability

So like ascertained?

He was assuaged by his answer

Removed suspicion

Because the subject is required to describe a situation
or event familiar to the examiner

So auspicious is the opposite of suspicion then?

Who knows?

Only the most auspicious one

I don't know how auspicious and suspicion
are really linked

Auspicious is positive,

Suspicious is negative.

Yes

They both mean something

indirectly

Yes

Which is most suitable for our purposes

Haha

Most auspicious, in fact

Well you can't argue with it really

The auspiciousness

I wonder if one could be said
to have auspicion?

The benefit of being able to acknowledge
auspiciousness?

Trying to think of a phrase....

no, to be used in place of
suspicion, but positive

Well, sussed then!

Sussed is positive

Bish bash bosh

But thinking about it, we use
suspicion in a positive sense

too "i suspect our book is going to be rather good"

Yeh

We've got it sussed

Yeh

3. Bird-brained or reptile brained

Birds and reptiles are commonly held to be lacking in smarts. 'Bird-brained' was, for instance, often used with reference to the dullness of George Bush - that celebrated blight upon humanity. And a critic (of his) who once said, 'He has the brains of a gecko (Beluwama hoonek ge molayakne thiyanne)', referring to what lay beneath the presumed shrewdness of Sri Lanka's first Executive President, certainly wasn't implying that reptiles were of high intellect. I want to set the reptile intelligence record straight.

Fictional portrayals of the cunning of prehistoric reptiles, such as in 'Jurassic Park', may appear unrealistic: dinosaurs turning doorknobs, and the like. But their cousins of today do show remarkable abilities that we tend not to notice. Household geckos, garden lizards and monitors are capable of quite complex mental operations.

I was reminded of some sundry observations made over the years, whilst reading today that over half of our reptile species will soon be extinct. (Humans, especially those running the economic show behind the facades of Obama, are indeed bird-brained.)

Our ubiquitous gecko, I have discovered, is a competent geometrician. To get from a point at the bottom of a wall to one at the top of the wall opposite, it will cleverly follow the shortest line. It plots the correct angle of climb, for a route traversing three walls, despite the dimensional projection involved. More impressive is how it responds when approaches to a window that it wishes to use, to get outside, are repeatedly interrupted. At one point it suddenly gives up the effort, goes right out the door opposite - and gets out through the window in the adjacent room. Its purposeful trek suggests a deliberate decision to use the alternative route, outside its present field of vision. Leave food on a table and the watchful gecko will not make its move from a hidden observation point until it is satisfied you are not coming back in the next ninety seconds!

The cleverest geckos I've met lived in Mount Lavinia. Right outside our property was a street lamp, which was lit at a time between 6:15 and 7:00. Numerous little flying insects that crowded round this lamp provided easy fodder for three or four geckos that spent the night perched strategically on the lamp's support and the illuminated portion of the post. The geckos did not become prey to birds during the daytime because they retired to our roof in the morning, along the wire that fed electricity to our house.

4. Attractive Bodies

Some body shapes are gorgeously attractive while others fail to arouse at all. Beautiful bodies wordlessly promise pleasure. As a result, nice bodies are selectively sought. People eager to be rated physically attractive or sexy are ready to part with small fortunes to make the body beautiful.

Star Remedy update: Moon applying to Jupiter / Chiron opposition. Although the full moon was exact yesterday (Monday 22nd Feb 2016) at 18:19 the flavour of this moon is strongly influenced by Jupiter retrograding in Virgo opposite Chiron in Pisces, to which the moon is still applying, exact at 02:43 on Wednesday 24th.

As ever with these astro-updates, I'll do the analysis, you do the synthesis. Those of us with planets at or near 20 degrees of the mutable signs will feel the effects of this time and the following especially potently.

Virgo / Pisces

The basic conversation in the air at the moment regards the need for order / boundaries / self-improvement / mental discrimination on the one hand, and chaos / dissolution / self-acceptance / undifferentiated compassion on the other. Those falling on the Virgo side of the argument will be winding themselves up into a frenzy of getting things done, getting things right, sorting things out, likely feeling resentful of the Piscean other or others who appear absent or just plain incompetent. Those on the Piscean side will be giving themselves the time and space to feel their feelings (positive), or trying to escape reality in some way (not so positive), likely feeling pressured by and vulnerable to the Virgoan other or others. Many of us will be bouncing internally between these two basic poles of "It's all alright. Everything is perfect just as it is" and "I need to do something to make things be alright!" It's important to realise that both positions are fundamentally true.

Jupiter / Chiron Opposition (Nov 2015 - Aug 2016)

(currently in the second exact pass, until end of Feb)

This is the culminating point of the 13-14 year "Faith in Shamanism" cycle. It's the time when, collectively, our sacred wounds are being dramatised and played through. Our brokennesses, those experiences we have had which leave scars and damage upon our bodies and souls, now become part of the Jovial drama of life. It's excruciating. Those ways we have learned to cope with our pain which do not place a trust and faith in that which has hurt us as serving a higher purpose are now exposed as ineffectual. Those ways of managing our wounds that do not also help others to manage theirs or contribute in some way to healing the collective experience of the issue are exposed as selfish and self-defeating. Ultimately we're heading to place of understanding and acceptance of all that is broken, indeed experiencing it as beautifully, inevitably, perfectly, maybe even purposively broken. Right now at the retrograde second pass we're still working it through in story form, probably one of the more dispiriting or depressing episodes.

Jupiter Retrograde

Jupiter / Zeus energy is king and queen of the Gods, the life and soul of the party. When Jupiter is with you, life has meaning, it makes sense. Jupiter retrograding means that the king/queen energy is absent, has gone on retreat. Why? Retrograding In Virgo this energy has either a) had a rare attack of modesty or self-consciousness and is playing shy, b) has made some sort of mistake which it needs to correct and is taking time out in order to work on itself, or c) has simply earned a holiday, after all, being the king and queen really is far harder work and more responsibility than it might seem and having a holiday every now and again gives the rest of the court a chance to experience leaderlessness, and thus appreciate the leadership more fully. Consequently, Jupiter retrograde is generally a time when it's harder to feel the faith that life's journey is unfolding with meaning. Jupiter went retrograde on 8th Jan and goes direct again on 9th of May.

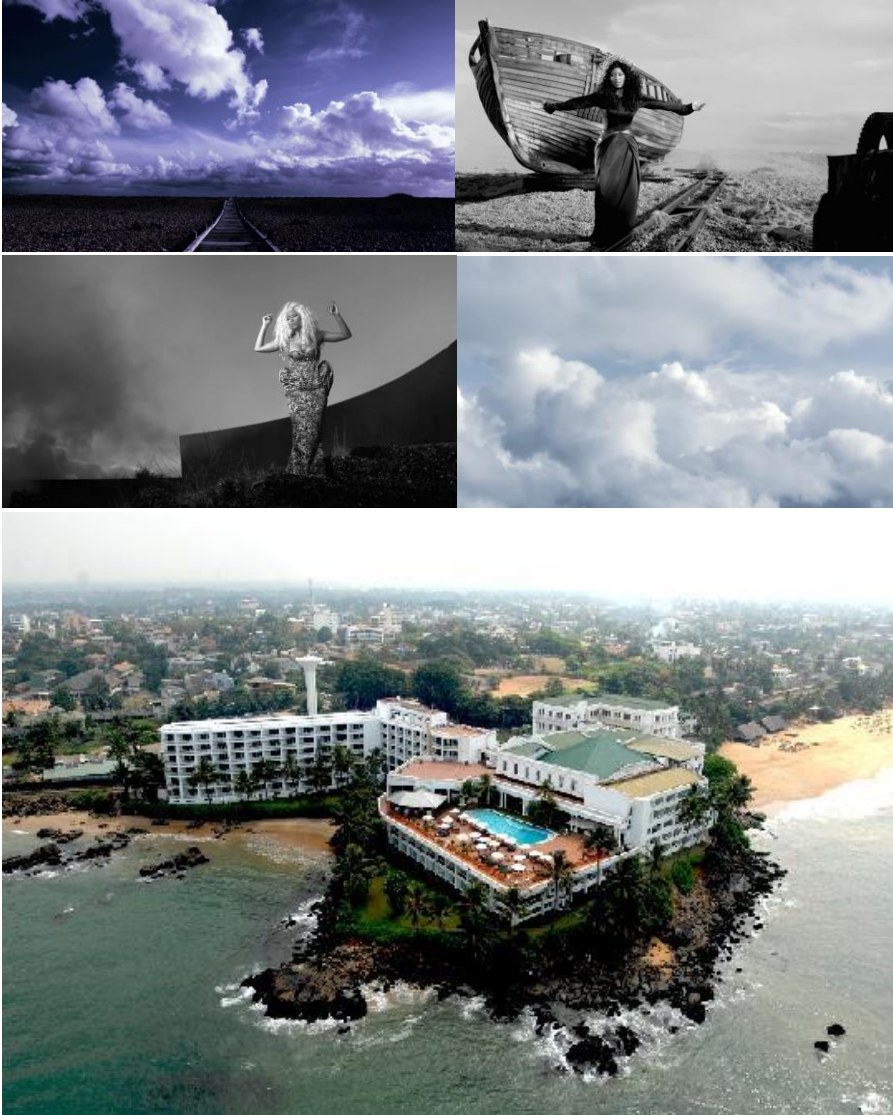

If all that seems a bit bity, contradictory, and confusing then hopefully that's because that's the mood in the sky! Keep swimming.⁵

doves are territorial, lock them in for a week and they'll never leave.

Living next to a development site of a new bypass junction; a junction onto both sides of the A6 trunk road, at Barton, Preston (Lancs). The new bypass will lead to the major M6 and M55 junction which is only about 1-1.5 miles to the south.

This new slip road is going to cut out a great swathe of agricultural land. Land that is hedge-lined and predominantly flat, down to grass for grazing, characteristic of rural north Preston. The Bowland Fells forming a visual backdrop, some 12-15 miles distance to the north east.

This particular flock of doves seem to reside in one of the large remnant Oak trees (left when the land was cleared for modern farming) on the southern boundary line. The doves flock around their resident tree, which sits next to a bungalow, as there is a settlement right next to their habitat. They seem territorial as one can observe them, when slowing at the existing traffic lights in the vicinity.

The doves fly along the field boundary, which runs in an east west direction, in a group of what looks to be about 12-14, occasionally flirting out over into the field. The doves keep the typical murmuration formation, always the same distance apart (from each bird's respective neighbour) and flying at the same speed, resulting in the common apex, arrow like shape.

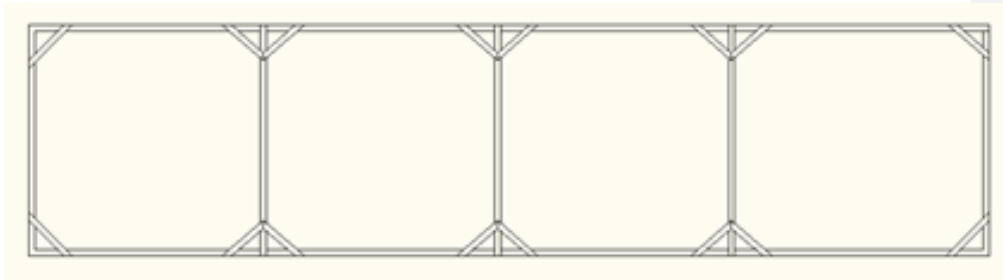

This seems to be behaviour typical of territorial animals and many birds particularly; it is a great source of fascination for science I expect. And much has been made of the murmuration of starlings, as indeed they form the most dramatic protean mass, owing to their number. However, there is cogent evidence that many other bird species display this capacity crows for example, and indeed the contraction and retraction (i.e (its power of) shortening so as to draw its extremities nearer together, or vice versa,) in impetus to murmurate is also evident in this set of doves.

So there will most likely be an effect, from the construction of and then implementation of , the new highway works, upon the observed doves. Although the doves are territorial so they may remain.

How then will their existence effect the highway? The drivers. Is a bubble of auspicious transfixion to bounce on the fringe of this new infrastructure, a raft of biology anchored to an old tree, between houses and cars. Will the souls once inside dinosaurs, now in doves, mind? Or will they persist contracted, as our ubiquitous tarmacadam extremities tumble unfettered. like a shortened pencil lollipop on a 6ft pole Synchronicity, two cars that are the same. Give the world meaning. Project onto the environment the levels of resolution you may achieve; in regards grief, comforts and hope. Thinking about a person.

I will always like the fact that doves have territories and live in groups. What level of hope can that give me? That is part of the world I understand? And a way I connect with others.

Feel the force Luke. The force is strong with this one. Trust your feelings Luke.
