

Cranstock

contents

1. polly joke	5
2. sea change	6
3. memory collage 1	7
4. turbine	8
5. conflict	9
6. blood tea	11
7. postcards	12
8. flashing fog	13
9. gratitude	14
10. hard image	15
11. a bright splashing	16
12. midpoint 1	17
13. leaving	18
14. melting	19
15. liftoff	20
16. distance	21
17. laughter	22
18. change	23
19. low god	24
20. monk	25

Polly joke

polly joke guillemots surf the clean mind on our north coast. and crow, and gull.
I drop a cigarette butt for the police to find, my rust patina blister waits on grass to burn rubber. I take water and sit, on land as familiar as my own body. nothing I can see from here has no analogue in my flesh. every grass, each dusty shard of stone, the chunk and crease and fold of the granite I have seen before, reminds me of myself, is as much home as my chest and arms, hair, skin.

sea change

a sea change brings billowing sheets and a crackling of lightning. gull, starling, raven. adrift, unhanded. a limpet. bloodthirsty pushes a face against cool crystal wall, grimacing, full of colour, raw, soft, healthy.

memory collage 1

chattering ferns at camp, and gull, and startling, and raven, deer. the corner of a cleaver sunk into pine, handle at handle and is not moved. shelter is given by an amygdalis on geological scale, spilt earth, rolling there. pale little creatures dressed in all black, creeping through the woods, startle easily.
we do not

turbine

myself a turbine, pile and stack and boy, squat. three sky bows, nose and axle clank, stack come close and plates are laid.

conflict

stark and blind rage, blind love. the surface of an eye nearing its subject. glaze, flop, nut. pale leaf, running water. tripod, eggshell, wool, plantain.

blood tea

everything I can see has precise analogue in my flesh, its surface and texture in fingertips loopback, blood washing back and forth, frothing at the heart, pooling in the brain, thoughts rise therefrom, like slow steam, absorbed into the air, one big thought.

Postcards

postcards sent back from a long break to family, ridden like metal coping, the rails of a prism light up futures read from great minestones mixed in a glone compartment and cast by roundabouts.

flashing fog

flashing fog flashes around temple fitting / my wheels turn the road over the top to cream /
I look out for curves and find a boat on a trailer, roadside / I shed tears for my little light, dying / orange winking slowly at a red square / and roll a festive, smaying undulation of led strips ahead into nothingness / I don't look back / day dawns /
now colours of undetermined frequency bloom like hedges / thank you for the apple

gratitude

and the pimi and dates and linseed and the honey
and for garlic, string, time, a pattern

hard image

without exactly a soft, shining face in front of mine, soft fantasy slides off hard image in black, tan, blue a hole punched from right now, all the way back to portugal 1993, black, tan, deepest azure

1 let go of soft fantasy and focus on hard image in black, tan, blue

a bright splashing

a bright splashing,
running counter to walls, fences, hugging hedges, skimming along the rolling curve of a rainbow,
casting crown and standing into an orange-greasy sky,
unripping along the ground like new bramble,
never at rest,
always bright,
always splashing.

midpoint 1

my body lies for three days under alpaca, unclenching, like a fist into silence.

I catch myself on the second day, as night falls in a grubby white velvet, before streetlights flick orange into the houses, as they did for vera, betty, mary. there is no third dawn.

leaving

I hung around as long as I could, but there was violence in the air and a train to catch. what could have been a home become museum with one dusty resident. terror at capture is always justified, trap phone me, fine pelt you.

welling

a welling blue flame, hot as tears, marbled as butane, round as a hernia, hollow as a bubble, welling like excitement for making up stories.

liftoff

a small floating, always small. a slower pun, trainee itinerant meets professional flotam. time and time again, with minimal liftoff, an hemfitted curtailment and never any record made. someone, or some part of someone, is 'kicked to the curb.

distance

scorching salty sun, screaming ocean, its blue built to embrace the light.
the glint from a car in a town across the bay, set amongst green fields, brings a feeling of distance that, despite being so small, cool, sun-kissed and salt-spattered, carries the bright pain of every lost love.

laughter

fill your ears with roaring people, and, corralled by elbows, bow down into laughter's ancient vein, lie there, among lying bodies, be carried in this channel, silencing, severing, silver.

change

the rush of tears brought by thinking about an unfinished bottle of water, forgotten on a train station, an example, of my failure to change my mind, specifically not to rush

low god

fragrant mud wants to keep you, mocks wheels, is a kind of god. we wear its symbols on our hands and thighs while it sits, smiling, below our feet.

work

a hot flush in horses and rainbows, doesn't really speak, but rises slowly from my back. proof of work floats away like what I want for wants, not really speaking, into cold highland air.